

I am very concerned about the seemingly exponential growth of media monopolies in recent years. We citizens need to have access to a wide variety of perspectives on the events in our increasingly complex world in order to make sound, informed choices. Indeed, I would argue that competition among the various media serving a particular geographic region is essential for a healthy democracy and must be vigorously protected.